

SPANISH LANGUAGE, LITERATURES, AND CULTURE MAJOR

Undergraduate Program Director: Manel Lacorte, Ph.D.

Academic Advisor: Chris Lewis, Ph.D.

Heritage Language Advisor: Evelyn Canabal-Torres, Ph.D.

The undergraduate major in Spanish Language, Literatures, and Cultures consists of 36 credits of coursework beyond the intermediate prerequisite level, with an additional supporting area (nine credits). All students will take a core of four courses and a three-course literature/culture sequence focused on Spain or Latin America. The remaining coursework will come from one of three tracks: (1) Literature, Culture, and Media; (2) Linguistics, Culture, and Education; or (3) Language, Culture, and Professional Contexts.

Placement in Courses

All students new to The School of Languages, Literatures, and Cultures (SLLC) courses must take the online Foreign Language Placement Assessment (FLPA) before registering for classes. Visit arhu.umd.edu/undergraduate/flpa (<http://arhu.umd.edu/undergraduate/flpa/>) for more information.

Double Major/Double Degree

A student may wish to fulfill the major requirements in two chosen fields. If the two majors do not belong to the same college, the requirements of both colleges must be met. The courses for the other major will fulfill the Spanish Supporting Courses requirement. A double major may be earned with completion of all requirements and a total of 120 credits. A double degree may be awarded with completion of all requirements and a total of 150 credits. The student must decide on a primary and a secondary major. Academic decisions for each student are made by the primary college.

Program Learning Outcomes

Students who complete the requirements for the major in Spanish can expect to be able to speak, read, write, and understand Spanish at a level that would allow them to communicate with native speakers, to recognize and interpret the diverse cultural perspectives and products of the Spanish-speaking world, and to be culturally sensitive members of society. Students will acquire the following knowledge and skills:

1. Demonstrate understanding and knowledge of varied aspects of the cultures of the Spanish-speaking world and act in appropriate and culturally sensitive ways.
2. Show competence in speaking, reading, writing, and understanding Spanish as a way to communicate with other cultures.
3. Analyze and interpret a variety of texts and traditions from diverse Spanish-speaking cultures, including that of the United States.
4. Communicate effectively in Spanish both orally and in writing on a range of topics.
5. Conduct research in Spanish in the areas of language, literature, and culture.
6. Demonstrate bilingual functionality and therefore increase their marketability and performance in the work place.

To declare a major in Spanish, students should meet with the undergraduate advisor to begin the process.

OPPORTUNITIES

Study Abroad

All students majoring in Spanish are encouraged to study abroad in a Spanish-speaking environment. The program advisor will review all proposed course sequences before the study abroad experience and determine equivalencies after official transcripts have been received by UMD (students should expect to present samples of work done abroad to advisor).

For information on study abroad programs, see the Education Abroad website: globalmaryland.umd.edu/offices/education-abroad (<http://globalmaryland.umd.edu/offices/education-abroad/>).

Combination of the Spanish Major and Teacher Certification

Students may combine the Linguistics, Culture, and Education track with a second major in Foreign Language Education to earn teacher certification. Students must take the California Achievement Test to become eligible for admission to the College of Education. Information and Declaration of Major forms can be found in room 1210 of the Benjamin Building. A graduate program in Education for teacher certification is available to students who receive a B.A. in Spanish from our department.

Note: All courses must be in Spanish.
