

RUSSIAN LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE MAJOR

Program Director: Cynthia L. Martin, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Russian

The undergraduate major in Russian Language and Literature consists of 40 credits beyond the prerequisite of Elementary Russian (RUSS101, RUSS102 or equivalent). Many students pursue a double major or double degree in Russian and another discipline, such as international relations, business, history, economics, journalism, engineering, etc. Russian students have the opportunity to live in St. Mary's Language House, and the majority of majors participate in study abroad. Native or heritage speakers wishing to enroll in Russian courses or major in Russian should consult the undergraduate advisor. Students interested in enrolling in a course that appears closed or that has a waitlist are strongly encouraged to contact the faculty member or undergraduate advisor for Russian for permission to enroll.

Placement in Courses

When registering for a Russian course for the first time, the system will require that you have taken the Foreign Language Placement Assessment. For information about the Foreign Language Placement Assessment, go to: <http://arhu.umd.edu/undergraduate/flpa/>. Please consult with the Russian advisor or Program Head, as well.

Program Learning Outcomes

1. Russian majors will be able to communicate effectively in spoken Russian in a broad range of everyday situations and contexts.
2. Russian majors will communicate effectively in written Russian in essays on a range of topics.
3. Russian majors will demonstrate fundamental knowledge of the culture(s) of the Russian Federation (literature, history, art, cuisine, traditions, etc.).

REQUIREMENTS

Students must take language-acquisition courses sequentially. Once credit has been received in a higher level language acquisition or grammar course, a lower level course may not be taken for credit.
